Knit WITS

Here's the thing: summer holiday dressing is all very well but it doesn't always translate to our nippy London nights. The solution? British knitter Alex Gore Browne's fine-gauge, pretty 'cocktail sweaters'. Having knitted for the late, great Alexander McQueen she's relaunching her label (while still consulting for the house), using super-fine Hawick cashmere and Bologna yarns. Also in the wings, a cast of colourful lightweight knits are perfect for layering over summer dresses and under blazers when we edge into autumn.

CHINTI AND PARKER sweater, £375 (chintianandparker.com)

From £485, at net-a-porter.com

IMPORT BEAUTIES: Magda Butrym

'Romantic punks, London's Blitz Kids subculture and Victorian femininity' are among Magda Butrym's influences. The emerging Warsaw-based designer is drawing an international crowd thanks to her ruffled track tops and hand-crocheted dresses that carry a tough, cool-girl spirit. Polish craftsmanship anchors this one-to-watch.

Available exclusively at net-a-porter.com

From, £225, available at Selfridges and Roksanda, Mount Street, W1

Roksanda is loved for her off-kilter colour combinations and quirky silhouettes. So it follows that her new handbag collection would carry the same trademarks. Spoiler alert: happily it does.

We've all been there — he's pulling a hamstring on the dancefloor, wearing... 'dadwear'. Just don't show him this laugh-a-minute feed or he might consider it justification.
